However, unhygienic practices and a lack of scientific knowledge have occasionally resulted in food poisoning and even tragic fatalities. CVL has addressed these issues by employing scientifically prepared starter cultures for the fermentation process, ensuring a higher quality and more hygienic final product. Currently, the production relies on a locally crafted incubator with limited capacity. With the provision of essential machinery and technical support, this project has the potential to revolutionize this long-standing tradition, promote safer practices while creating new opportunities in the fermentation sector and fostering business growth.
